After all, this is a film that poses the question of whether doctors and family members should sustain life using machinery, and the sound of that machinery was in itself a part of the character of the film. If there's a loudspeaker blaring in the background or a machine beeping, those were elements that we put a lot of value in, actually, and it wouldn't have felt real if it had been a sound vacuum.

From the losses that are part of life to our unmet needs, how were we meant to find

During Plastic Free July, I had to take a look at my relationship to SUP and explore the guilt I feel about using it and the fear I feel about the growing problem of plastic pollution. Some poems are about my therapists, some are about love and happier times, and some are about life in general, not necessarily from a depressive's point of view.
