Maps fascinate us. They chart our understanding of the world and they log our progress, but above all they tell our stories. From the early.

On the Map: Why the World Looks the Way It Does | Edinburgh Book Review

I always thought there was something profoundly magical about maps. As a child, they afforded me a tantalizing glimpse of the world out there, and how huge it.

While Jennings' book was more of a leisurely ethnography of map enthusiasts, Garfield's is more of a textbook. Hmm Moments: Eratosthenes, Strabo, and Ptolemy, each genius in their own way, each working with what was done before, each lost in the destruction of Alexandria. Taking in the defiant relics of ancient cities such as Ani, a once thriving metropolis lost to conquered lands, and the church tower of San Juan Parangaricutto, that miraculously stands as the sole survivor of a town sunk by lava.
