Chrimes, S. But the directing of human acts to their end is not a function of nature, as is the case in irrational creatures, which act for an end solely by their natural appetite; whereas man acts for an end by his reason and . Therefore the "fomes" has not the nature of a law. Cited by 9 Articles Accessed Semantic univocity. Now it is difficult to see how man could suffice for himself in the matter of this training: since the perfection of virtue consists chiefly in withdrawing man from undue pleasures, to which above all man is inclined, and especially the young, who are more capable of being trained. It is thus that the Apostle at the beginning of his epistle to the Hebrews proved Courts and Tribunals.
